Topics include...

Early College Planning

Preparing for life after high school is not something that should be done just before graduation. In this workshop, you will learn about what needs to be done as early as a student's freshman year of high school to plan for success in college.

GRIT: Growth Mindset

Many educators are focusing on the concept of "Grit" to describe traits such as perseverance and resilience. Research is showing that these traits may be more important than natural academic talent with respect to student success. In this session, you will learn more about the importance of perseverance and what you can do to help your child develop the resilience needed to face academic and other life challenges.
